Online fieldwork: 29th October - 15th December 2019

Q1. Across the UK, under current laws in each country, assisted dying is illegal. The Royal College of General Practitioners has decided to consult its members on what its position on assisted dying should be. The College takes positions on significant ethical issues to ensure that it can influence the debate around government policy in the best interests of its members and our patients. Please select one of the following statements: Base: All respondents

I think that the RCGP should oppose a change in the law on assisted dying because:
Base: All who said the RCGP should oppose a change in the law on assisted dying

	Total
Total	3144 100%
Changing the law may put vulnerable patients at risk	2812 89%
I do not agree that medical professionals should be involved in assisted dying	2291 73%
I have a moral objection to assisted dying	2083 66%
I have an objection to assisted dying because of my religious beliefs	1668 53%
Any benefit to the autonomy of the individual is outweighed by the potential harm to the doctor-patient relationship	1445 46%
I do not think there is the resource in the NHS or relevant regulatory bodies to provide or oversee the delivery of assisted dying	1173 37%
I worry that legalising assisted dying might lead to other state interventions into healthcare	1155 37%
Any change in the law should come from society or politicians and the RCGP should not take a position on matters such as this	226 7%

Q3. Please select all the reasons that support your view on what the College's position on assisted dying should be.

I think that the RCGP should support a change in the law on assisted dying, providing there is a regulatory framework and appropriate safeguarding arrangements in place, because:

Base: All who said the RCGP should support a change in the law on assisted dying, providing there is a regulatory framework and appropriate safeguarding processes in place

	Total
Total	2684 100%
People should have choice and agency over their own life	2251 84%
By supporting a change in the law RCGP can be involved in planning the practice of assisted dying	2098 78%
Legalising assisted dying allows regulation of something which people may take upon themselves or have family members help them do	2005 75%
This is primarily a societal issue and in my opinion society has moved on and wants a change in the law	1401 52%

Base: All who said the RCGP should be neutral on the topic of the law on assisted dying

	Total
Total	701 100%
The RCGP should be able to represent the views of all of its members irrespective of whether they oppose or support a change in the law	414 59%
It is unclear what the legal and practical frameworks for assisted dying would be	401 57%
The RCGP could serve the interests of its members better by being neutral on this issue when influencing the planning of care and regulation	328 47%
I believe the medical professions should allow legislators to form their own opinion on this and decide whether and how to change the law	212 30%
It is not the RCGP's place to take a firm position on a societal issue	199 28%
This issue is too contentious for the RCGP to take a position on	129 18%
